'FASCINATING, CHALLENGING-BREAKING'

ELIN DIAMOND, RUTGERS UNIVERSITY

'UNUSUALLY INFLUENTIAL BOOK'

JULIAN THOMAS, MANCHESTER UNIVERSITY

What is the connection between performance and archaeology?

Do disciplinary boundaries have meaning anymore?

Can archaeology suggest new approaches in performance, beyond the theatrical paradigm?

... is a brilliant and provocative challenge to disciplinary practice and intellectual boundaries. It brings together critical proposals in both archaeological and performance theory to generate a startlingly original and intriguing methodological framework. It facilitates a new way of investigating remains and artefacts, and reflects of physicality, materiality, site and context.

The book takes scholarly innovation to new levels; it is the result of a long-term, unique collaboration between a renowned archaeological theorist and a leading theatre artist. The result is a vibrant dialogic writing which bridges the scholarly/practitioner divide.

In its unique integration of theory, narrative and autobiography, ... brings a new dimension to two burgeoning fields of inquiry.

... is Professor of Performance Studies at the University of Wales Aberystwyth. For thirty years he has pioneered innovative approaches in the practice, theory, pedagogy and documentation of performance. From 1981-87 he was an artistic director at Birk's Caf.

... is Professor of Classics and Cultural Anthropology at Stanford University. He is one of the world's foremost archaeological theorists, and author of many books including Excavating the Past (1992), Classical Archaeology of Greece (1995), and Imagined Greece: City State (1999).
