ANTHROPOLOGY CAREERS IN THE PUBLIC SECTOR

How have anthropologists forged careers in government and non-governmental organizations? How have they used their academic training in anthropology to pursue projects such as community-based conservation and sustainable development, the protection and management of national forests and grasslands, and the conversion of a military post to public use?

Come and hear a panel of Stanford alumni with advanced degrees in anthropology discuss their work in public sector organizations.

DATE: MONDAY, MARCH 10TH, TIME: 3:15-5:00PM, PLACE: BUILDING 50, 51-A

PANEL

Susan Charnley (Ph.D. Anthropology 1994) is Research Social Scientist with the USDA Forest Service, Pacific Northwest Research Station.

Liz Clevenger (BA Archaeology 2003; MA Cultural and Social Anthropology 2004) is Curator at the Presidio Trust in San Francisco.

Brodie Ferguson (Ph.D. Anthropology 2010) is founder and CEO of Anthrotect, LLC, a social enterprise dedicated to making conservation a viable economic alternative for forest-dependent communities.
