ICPSR Study Number: 8451

Funding Agency: National Science Foundation

Grant Number: SES 84-09725

Summary: This collection furnishes data on executions performed under civil authority in the United States between 1608 and 2002. The dataset describes each individual executed and the circumstances surrounding the crime for which the person was convicted. Variables include age, race, name, sex, and occupation of the offender, place, jurisdiction, date, and method of execution, and the crime for which the offender was executed. Also recorded are data on whether the only evidence for the execution was official records indicating that an individual (executioner or slave owner) was compensated for an execution.

Universe: Executions that occurred under civil authority in the United States or within territory that later became the United States.

Dates of Collection: 1970-2002

Time Period: 1608-2002

STUDY DESCRIPTION

In the winter of 1607-1608, Captain George Kendall, previously appointed one of the original councilors of the Jamestown colony, was accused of mutiny, tried in front of a jury of his peers, and shot to death. His execution, the first in the American colonies, represents the starting point of this study, which furnishes data on public executions occurring in the United States from 1608 through 2002. These data were originally collected by Mr. M. Watt Espy of Headland, Alabama. Beginning with his own personal resources in May 1970, and later with the support of The University of Alabama Law Center and the National Science Foundation, Mr. Espy and Dr. Smykla have confirmed 15,269 executions performed in the United States under civil authority since 1608. This dataset contains 21 variables that describe each individual executed and the circumstances surrounding the crime for which the person was convicted.

METHODOLOGY

The commencement and early development of this project were the direct result of the efforts of M. Watt Espy who, for many years accumulated and recorded information about executions in the United States from his home in Headland. Mr. Espy's data collection strategies reflect the modest resources with which he operated and the unavailability of computer facilities. The following description of his methodology is a retrospective account of WHAT he did and HOW he did it.

When Mr. Espy confirmed an execution he recorded its basic information in each of two ledgers. In one, he arranged executions by state in chronological order. He recorded, as was available, the name, race, age and occupation of the offender, county of conviction, place and jurisdiction of execution, crime, date and method of execution, and, if the case was a slave execution, whether or not the owner or executioner was compensated. The second ledger contained the same cases in chronological order. The data recorded in these two ledgers were assigned numeric codes where appropriate and organized into a format where one execution became a single case in a machine-readable data file.

The process of locating thousands of executions scattered in no predictable pattern across an extended period of time in a very large number of jurisdictions and reported in many sources meant employing unique data collection strategies. At least one strategy, however, was employed across all states. Espy collected data from state departments of corrections on persons executed under state jurisdiction after authority was centralized in the state and record-keeping was routinized. This followed the precedent established by Negley K. Teeters and Charles J. Zibulka who in 1968 compiled an inventory of executions which occurred under state authority in the United States between 1864 and 1967. Espy confirmed all these executions through an exhaustive search of other authoritative sources including contemporary newspaper accounts in original form or microfilmed records, relevant secondary accounts based on them, or sometimes through direct or indirect query of other historical records. Such records include published and unpublished county histories, proceedings of state or local courts, and holdings of historical societies, museums, and archives.

Where another source was consulted or, as is often the case in newspapers, many accounts are available, the different reports were compared to complete and confirm details. This often required a systematic search of the editions of a newspaper over a period of months or years. Such newspapers as THE NEW YORK TIMES, RICHMOND TIMES DISPATCH, and BIRMINGHAM NEWS have been used in this way. Such Colonial newspapers as the VIRGINIA GAZETTE and SOUTH CAROLINA GAZETTE have also been extensively investigated. An extended list of representative sources which have been drawn upon in this study is included in Appendix A. In his research, Espy also discovered unrecorded executions and indications that other persons were under the death sentence. He made approximately 3,000 corrections to the Teeters and Zibulka inventory for missing or incomplete data elements.

Espy also consulted letters to local historical societies (as listed in the DIRECTORY OF HISTORICAL SOCIETIES AND AGENCIES IN THE U.S. AND CANADA, 10th edition, 1975) and other listings of executions such as Teeters' inventory of public executions in Pennsylvania. These investigations accumulated more facts about executions, provided additional confirmations, and discovered executions not previously known.

This research effort, exhaustive as it may be, remains incomplete in two ways. First, some executions, particularly from earlier periods, have not yet been discovered because of the absence of a historical record or the failure to locate an existing historical record. Second, some of the executions which have been discovered are confirmed only with partial data. In its coverage of the last half century, however, this dataset is an extraordinarily comprehensive inventory. With the possible exception of those executed in portable electric chairs in Louisiana (September 11, 1941 - May 31, 1957) and Mississippi (October 11, 1940 - March 2, 1955), Espy's perseverance has produced the most complete list yet compiled of all executions conducted under state and local authority since September 11, 1941 when state level data on executions became available nationwide.

By method of execution, the completeness of the entire inventory varies by type. All those by lethal injection have been confirmed and possibly all those by asphyxiation and electrocution with the exception of those electrocuted in portable electric chairs in Louisiana and Mississippi as noted above. The completeness of the inventory for other methods of execution, however, such as hanging, burning, and pressing is less certain since these occurred primarily in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries and are, consequently, more difficult to uncover from the historical record.

When data sources reported conflicting pieces of information (for example, different execution dates, offense, offender's age, etc.), data collection and coding adopted the following decision rules. Appeals Court Records and state and regional reports which offered legal records of a case were accepted as the most authoritative source. Because Appeals Court Records were not, as a rule, published before the early 19th century and even then capital cases were only appealed based on judicial discretion and the offender's resources, information contained in newspapers published in the city or state where the execution took place was accepted as more authoritative than one published in another city, county, or state. And, in the event of conflicting accounts, information published in a contemporary paper was accepted over information published retrospectively. At other times, material obtained from county historical societies resolved disputes between conflicting sources.

Once the data from the state ledger of executions was coded, the following measures were taken to insure data reliability. A computer printout of data from the chronological ledger of executions was checked against: (1) original coding sheets; (2) data coded from the state ledger of execution; (3) typed verbatim transcriptions of information on index cards from the source used to confirm the execution; (4) a repeat of step three by an alternate coder; and (5) a thorough analysis of every piece of information on the final printout by Mr. Espy. The complete dataset was then transferred to the Inter-university Consortium for Political and Social Research (ICPSR) at the University of Michigan where further consistency checks were performed. All records were carefully examined to locate and correct any wild codes, and an ICPSR state code (Variable 18) was added to every case in the file. To as great an extent as possible, this computerized database is an accurate representation of the records in Mr. Espy's ledgers.

For the later years, 1987 to 2002, Dr. Smykla used the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People's (NAACP) quarterly publication, DEATH ROW, U.S.A., to identify cases. Then using the newspaper search file capabilities of NEXUS, additional variables were identified.

PROJECT DESCRIPTION

Mr. Espy moved the research project from his home in Headland to The University of Alabama Law Center in Tuscaloosa, Alabama in 1977. In August 1984, the National Science Foundation awarded the University of Alabama a one-year grant to support development of a comprehensive computer database on the history of capital punishment in the United States. The project was conceived as a joint venture between The University of Alabama under the direction of John Ortiz Smykla, Professor of Criminal Justice, and the Inter-university Consortium of Political and Social Research, first under the direction of Christopher Innes, now with the Bureau of Justice Statistics, and later by Erik W. Austin. The University of Alabama agreed to continue data collection in the identification of new cases, add information to cases already confirmed, and develop and computerize the database. ICPSR agreed to process and prepare the data files for distribution. A project advisory committee of eight national scholars with experience in the development of large databases, capital punishment research, and use of historical data provided the initial guidance and expressed the concern of the academic community. They were Professors David Baldu (University of Iowa), Hugo Bedau (Tufts University), William Bowers (Northwestern University), Fred Dubow (University of Illinois, Chicago Circle), Colin Loftin (University of Maryland), Eric Monkennen (University of California at Los Angeles), Michael Radelet (University of Florida), and Stanton Wheeler (Yale University).

At The University of Alabama, implementation and refinement of computer operations and procedures and general staff supervision were done by Mr. Samuel Fisher III, project manager and doctoral candidate in political science. Coding and entry of the data at The University of Alabama were done by undergraduate and graduate students in criminal justice and law.

The University of Alabama wishes to acknowledge the generous financial support of the National Science Foundation and the advice and encouragement of Dr. Felice Levine, Law and Social Sciences Director at NSF. This material is

FILE STRUCTURE

The data for the EXECUTIONS IN THE UNITED STATES, 1608-2002: THE ESPY FILE contain 21 variables and 15,269 cases, with a record length of 73. The data file is constructed with a single logical record for each case. A data file, machine-readable codebook, SPSS and SAS data definition statements have been prepared for this collection.

ICPSR PROCESSING INFORMATION

The data collection was processed according to the standard ICPSR processing procedures. The data were checked for illegal or inconsistent code values which, when found, were corrected after consultation with the principal investigators. Extensive consistency checks were performed. Variable 21 (Occupation of Offender) was converted to numeric form and slightly edited by ICPSR staff. Statements bracketed in "<" and ">" signs in the body of the codebook were added by the processors for explanatory purposes.
