Course Goals:

What are “mass media”? How do they shape culture and social life? How do cultural and structural forces shape them in turn? How should we study these relations?

In this course, we will explore the origin, structure and effects of contemporary mass media with an eye to answering these questions. In addition to examining television, film, and radio, the course will introduce you to empirical and critical methods of media analysis.

Readings:

Readings are available at the bookstore and online.

At the Bookstore, you should buy:

Course Reader

David Croteau and William Hoynes, Media/Society: Industries, Images, and Audiences

Nick Couldry, Media Rituals: A Critical Approach
Assignments:

Methods Project 1 (Due February 8):
Does the news reflect reality? To find out, you will design and carry out a content analysis of some news source and report your findings in a 6-8 page paper.

Midterm Exam (In class February 13)

Methods Project 2 (Due March 15):
You will undertake either a textual analysis or an ethnographic study of a situated medium and write a 6-8 page report of your research.

Final Exam (Date TBA)

Expectations:

Participation:

While formally a lecture course, our class meetings will in fact be quite interactive. You’ll need to come to both lecture and section with the reading done and with the ability to participate in a class discussion.

To participate effectively, you should aim to speak in a way that moves a discussion forward and increases the learning for the whole group. Contributions can include questions, insights, and responses to other comments. They can also include provocative mistakes. Being “wrong” but intellectually adventurous can often help jump-start everyone’s thinking. One powerful comment or question is worth more than many less powerful remarks.

Projects:

Your projects need to come in on time and should represent your best work at every level. Papers that come in late or with errors of fact, grammar or spelling will be penalized. As ever, the Honor Code applies to all your work.

Grades:

Project 1 = 25%

Project 2 = 25%

Midterm = 20%

Final Exam = 25%

Participation = 5%
