PROJECT EASY LIVING COMPARABLE PUBLIC COMPANIES

Summary

- There is a significant disconnect between private market real estate values and public REIT share prices.
- Public companies are trading at a significant discount to NAV and their implied cap rate (based on share price) substantially exceeds private market cap rates.
- There has been relatively little change in private market apartment cap rates for institutional quality assets.

Recent Equity Research Excerpts

- "We favor the company's (referring to AVB) high-quality assets, which appear to be holding their value better than B/C product. A strong presence in high-barrier-to-entry markets is also helping support NAV, while allowing for above average earnings growth." - Bear Stearns AVB Report (1-10-2008)
- "We expect AVB's assets to continue to hold their value better than lesser-quality product in less desirable locations. AVB sold three communities through the third quarter of 2007 at a weighted average cap rate of 4.6%, below the 4.9% nominal cap rate used in our NAV calculation and in line with the average cap rate on four 2006 asset sales." - Bear Stearns AVB Report (1-10-2008)
- "Amidst an extremely illiquid transactions market, property values are currently very hard to peg. The fact that a major institutional player (JP Morgan) was willing to pay a price that approximates the values utilized in our estimate of NAV sends a reassuring signal that apartment values have yet to move down much from their mid-'07 highs." - Green Street AIMCO JV Report (1-4-2008)
- "The growing rental pool from the declining rate of homeowners should be a boost to apartment demand once supply issues are worked through." Citi Multifamily Update (12-18-07)
- "Many observers point to the wall of capital and the seemingly insatiable appetite of advisors and others looking to invest committed capital, as well as historically strong property-level fundamentals that still exist in apartment-land as support for sticky cap rates. Additionally, the dislocation in the debt markets has not had as profound of an impact on borrowing rates and cap rates for apartments as for other sectors, given the "back-stop" provided by apartment lenders Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac." - Green Street Apartment Outlook (11-30-2007)
- "Despite the debt market turmoil leading to widening spreads, treasury rates have come down and Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac remain active lenders in the space, thus diminishing the negative effects of the credit market tumult. That said, there remains the potential for higher debt costs based on the continued uncertainty in the market. Nonetheless, cap rates on A quality assets in top markets have yet to increase, although cap rates in secondary markets are up slightly. Cap rates remain in the 4% range in California and the West Coast more generally, and in the mid-to-high 4% range in its East Coast markets, with Boston averaging about 5.0% for AVB's assets." - Bear Stearns AVB Report (11-2-2007)
- "The greatest issue facing REIT investors generally, and apartment REIT investors specifically, is the ever-increasing discount to NAV at which REITs are trading. Apartment REITs now trade at a 25% discount to NAV and a 14% discount to unleveraged asset value. The public market is clearly expecting an increase in cap rates driven by slowing NOI growth, historically small equity risk premiums, and dislocation in the debt markets. While expectations of higher cap rates are justified, there has been no change in private-market apartment cap rates thus far." - Green Street Apartment Update (8-10-2007)
